Asuret .- Receipts, 90 bbls. The market was quiet but

At an early hour on Saturday morning Michael Cotter, residing at No. 156 Waverley place, entered the premises No. 122 Greene street, known as the "Smithsonian," and there met three young men, named John H. Eddington, Charles H. Daniels, and Charles S. Cowing. He soon left, but was followed by the three men, and, at the corner of Houston and Greene streets, they grabbed his gold watch, worth one hundred and fifty dollars, and attempted to run away with it, but Cotter seized the individual; where pon the latter offered to restore the timepiece to the owner, with the belief that he would then be released. In this, however, he was mistaken, as Cotter still held him firally and cried for help. Eddington's accomplices then advanced and made a most brutal assault on Cotter, knocking him down, beating him terr bly about the head, fale and down, beating him terr bly about the head, fale and eyes, and in doing so tore a diamond pin from his shirt bosom. At length Cotter broke loose from his assaliants and ran away, but on meeting officer Riley, of the Eighth precinct, returned with him to the corner of Houston and Greene streets. The highwaymen were still there, and the officer arrested them. At the station house Cotter identified the prisoners as the mn who had b aten and robbed him. Eddington, Daniels and Cowing were taken before Justice Bodge, who committed them to prison for trial, without ball.
